Developmental Assets: A Profile of Your 6th Grade Students

Participating Schools in Arlington

Search Institute's framework of Developmental Assets provides a tool for assessing the health and well-being of upper elementary-age children. The asset framework represents a common core of developmental building blocks crucial for all youth, regardless of community size, region of the country, gender, family economics, or race/ethnicity. This report summarizes the extent to which children in your community experience these assets and how the assets relate to their behavior. These 40 Developmental Assets were assessed in May, 2015 using the survey Me and My World.

The following table describes the students in your community who participated in the study.

Demographics of Students Surveyed
		Actual Number of Students	Adjusted Number of Students	Adjusted Percent of Total
Total Sample		572		100
Gender*	Male	272		50
	Female	277		50

	Multi-racial	79		14
	*Numbers may not sum to "Total Sample" due to missing information. Less than 0.5% rounded to zero.

The Developmental Assets are grouped into two major types (see Figures 1 and 2). External assets are the networks of support, opportunities and people that stimulate and nurture positive development in children. Internal assets are the young person's own commitments, values, and competencies. Figures 1 and 2 provide the percentage of all students in your study reporting each asset.

Most young people in the United States—regardless of age, gender, or region of the country—experience too few of the 40 assets. Search Institute's research on adolescents consistently has shown a small, but observable, decrease in assets among older adolescents (9th – 12th grade youth) as compared with young adolescents (6th – 8th grade youth). Early research on students in middle childhood suggest that this trend—younger children reporting more assets than older children—continues among 4th – 6th graders. See page 9 of the Full Report for a detailed discussion of this issue. Here is the average number of assets reported by youth in your community at each grade level.

Ideally, of course, all youth would experience 31-40 of these assets. Each community needs to establish a goal for what percentage of youth it seeks to be at this level. This process can provide an important opportunity for creating a community vision for your youth. The figure below shows the percentage of your youth who experience each of four levels of assets: 0-10, 11-20, 21-30, and 31-40.

This figure shows the power of assets to protect youth from risk behavior patterns. Search Institute's research consistently shows that youth with higher levels of assets are involved in fewer risk taking behaviors. Each vertical bar shows the average number of 6 risk behavior patterns among all youth, grouped by asset level (0-10, 11-20, 21-30, and 31-40). The 6 risk behavior patterns are: alcohol use, smoking, marijuana use, anti-social behavior, physical aggression/violence, and sadness.

This figure shows the power of assets to promote thriving indicators among your youth. Search Institute's research consistently shows that youth with higher levels of assets are more likely to report more thriving indicators. Each vertical bar shows the average number of seven thriving indicators among all youth, grouped by asset level (0-10, 11-20, 21-30, and 31-40). The seven thriving indicators are: school success, helps others, values diversity, delays gratification, coregulation, coping, and life satisfaction.

What Next? Moving from Awareness to Action

This report provides insights about the young people in your community and can be a powerful tool for community-wide discussion about how to improve the well-being of your youth. The good news is that everyone—parents, grandparents, educators, neighborhoods, children, teenagers, youth workers, employers, health care providers, coaches, and others—can build assets. Ideally, the whole community is involved to ensure that young people have the solid foundation they need to become tomorrow's competent, caring adults. Here are some suggestions for how to begin strengthening the assets among the youth in your community.

What adults can do . . .

- Smile at every child or adolescent you see.
- Send a "thinking of you" or birthday card, letter, or e-mail message to a child or adolescent.
- Invite a young person you know to do something together, such as playing a game or going to a park.

What young people can do . . .

- Ask your parent(s) to help you take advantage of interesting and challenging opportunities through youth programs, cocurricular activities, and congregational youth programs.
- Find a teacher you like at school and get to know her or him better.
- Find opportunities to build relationships with younger children such as service projects or tutoring.

What families can do . . .

- Model—and talk about—your own values and priorities.
- Regularly do things with your child, including projects around your house, recreational activities, and service projects.
- Talk to your children about assets. Ask them for suggestions of ways to strengthen theirs and yours.

What organizations can do . . .

- Highlight, develop, expand, or support programs designed to build assets, such as mentoring, peer helping, service-learning, or parent education.
- Provide meaningful opportunities for young people to contribute to others in and through your organization.
- Develop employee policies that encourage asset building, including flexible work schedules for parents as well as other employees, so that they can volunteer in youth development programs.
